Microbore high performance countercurrent chromatography (microHPCCC) is a new technique which combines high efficiency with convenient operation. The separation of pharmaceutical compounds in an organic solvent with a suitable organic salt can be achieved by microHPCCC. This paper reports the microHPCCC separation of two drugs enantiomers and their complexes in the presence of chiral counterions of the [(R)-, (S)-, and (R,S)-2-naphthyl phosphate]-Li salt system. At the same time, in situ NMR experiments were conducted to identify the separation mechanism. The microHPCCC enantioseparation procedure was optimized using two-factor central composite design and the retention of the drug enantiomers was a function of the various experimental variables. The feasibility and application of the microHPCCC method in routine analysis of pharmaceutical compounds was demonstrated by the enantioseparation of hydromorphone (HP), a semi-synthetic opioid used in the treatment of moderate to severe pain. Q: How do you measure the accuracy of a time model? How do you measure the accuracy of a time model, such as today's date? I'm sure the answer is "not well" given the uncertainty that a single day contains. But let's say we are actually interested in the answer to this question, is there some measure that we can make? A: There are several measures you can use: The difference between the time model and the current date. The difference between successive dates. The extent to which successive dates are "too far apart" (e.g., by comparing the time between 82157476af
